Tom, what contact information should we supply in our notice letter to our customers (please see below)? We can start sending out some of the notice letters as soon as we have this info.

Tom, we expect that a number of our customers will want to reach out to your clients when they receive notice from us of the subpoena. When the RIAA was in this business, it found that providing contact information to our subscribers and meaningfully responding to consumers' inquiries were very helpful as it alerted the RIAA to potential problems in suing some users (computers that had been hijacked by viruses or wireless ride alongs, unique financial situations, etc.) and it enabled the RIAA to start settlement discussions with those users that were so interested.

Do you have contact information that you would like us to pass along?

Thank you.

Craig

Craig,

As I had mentioned in our call, we are willing to work with you to make the request less burdensome and would happily agree to extend your deadline for response by informal agreement. Likewise, this agreement to extend time to respond for your business purpose of notifying your customers does not reflect our agreement that the court order requires you to do so. Please let me know how much time you need.

Best,

Tom

Tom, thank you for the information.

This gives us until this Friday to provide notice to our customers pursuant to the terms of the Court's Order. If we cannot identify all of our customers and get the letters out by then, we will need to object to the Order.

We will give you an update on Friday.

Craig,

We had served subpoena on your office in Reston with my signature on the 19th of February. I sent this one from our server file as a convenience. I will e-mail the signed one to you shortly. You may confirm this with your local subpoena response team. Thanks very much for your time today.

Best,

Tom

Tom, I noticed after we spoke that the G2 subpoena was not signed. Please let us know when you are planning on serving us with a signed version. Since this starts the clock for us to notify our customers and respond to the subpoena, it is an important date for us.

Thank you.

Craig
