50 Dime NBA selection on the Houston Rockets as a road favorite at Washington. As of 7:30 a.m. West Coast time, the Rockets were laying between 3 and 3½ points. I have to believe because the Wizards are a squad the public likes to fade that this line will only go up, so I advise you to jump on Houston as early as possible so you don't get caught taking a bad number.

ROCKETS

Don't be fooled by Houston's 1-5 record. This is a playoff-caliber basketball team and that will be proven over the course of the season. It's just the Rockets have A) faced an incredibly daunting schedule so far, and B) have been the recipients of some bad luck.

Houston opened the season at the defending-champion Lakers, and after sitting through the Lakers' ring ceremony and banner-raising, the Rockets went out and gave the two-time defending champs all they could handle before coming up just short in a 112-110 loss. The very next night, they went to Golden State, which took advantage of Houston's back-to-back situation and pressed the action all night, and again the Rockets fell just short, losing 132-128.

A 13-point home loss to the Nuggets came next, followed by last Wednesday's 107-99 home loss to the Hornets and then Saturday's 124-121 overtime road loss to the Spurs. So in summary, the Rockets dropped their first five games, three of them on the road by a total of 10 points, and those five teams woke up today with a combined record of 29-7! And if you take out Denver's 4-4 record, Houston's other four losses were against teams (Lakers, Warriors, Hornets, Spurs) that are a combined 25-3, and those four defeats were by margins of 2, 4, 8 and 3 points.

Well, one night after Saturday's overtime loss in San Antonio, the Rockets finally caught a break in the schedule: They returned home to face the lowly Timberwolves, and Houston took full advantage in running away with a 120-94 victory as an 8½-point favorite. And that brings us to tonight, with the Rockets catching another weak opponent in Washington.

If the Wizards aren't as bad as Minnesota, they're close. Just look at the starting five Washington is trotting out: rookie John Wall and over-the-hill veteran Kirk Hinrich in the backcourt; Andray Blatche and Al Thornton at forward; and something named JeVale McGee at center. Coming off the bench for the Wizards are "household" names Nick Young, Hilton Armstrong, Yi Jianlian and Carter Martin, with the occasional appearance by the oft-injured, always-mentally-erratic Gilbert Arenas.

And now you know why Washington has just one win (a one-point overtime home victory over the lowly 76ers) and four losses (to the Magic, Hawks, Knicks and Cavs by an average of 14.8 ppg).

True, Wall may end up being the best player on the court tonight, and I actually expect him to have a big game since he won't have speedy Rockets point guard Aaron Brooks to chase him around (Brooks is out several weeks with an ankle injury). But beyond point guard, Houston has the advantage at every position. And unlike Washington, the Rockets have an extremely deep bench.

Two final reasons to love Houston tonight: 1) The Wizards' 1-4 SU record is matched by a 1-4 ATS mark, and that's in addition to pointspread slumps of 4-11 at home, 4-11-1 against teams from the Southwest Division and 3-8 as an underdog; and 2) Houston has won and covered five straight games in Washington D.C., with an average victory margin of 8.6 points. And that's part of the Rockets' 12-2 SU and 10-4 ATS run in this rivalry!

Bottom line: Houston proved on Sunday that it can dominate a crappy team, and with no game tomorrow to worry about, the Rockets will prove it again with their sixth straight win on the Wizards' home court, this one a double-digit rout!

400-Unit NBA Money Maker #2 in a Row - ATLANTA HAWKS

Big home win for the Bucks on Tuesday night as they completely dominated the Knicks, building a 22 point lead after the first quarter and cruising in for the easy win and cover. But all that is going to disappear tonight when they travel to Atlanta and face a Hawks' squad that eliminated them from the playoffs last season after trailing 3-2.

One of the more exciting, and shocking, series in the playoffs last year, Atlanta rallied to knock out the Bucks after falling behind 3-2. But Milwaukee's downfall in that series will be its downfall tonight, just not enough offense to really challenge the Hawks. In the last two games of the series, the Bucks managed to average just 71.5 points, losing 83-69 in Game 6 and falling 95-74 in Game 7.

Even though they lit up the Knicks on Tuesday, Milwaukee had managed to hit triple digits just once in the first seven games of the season. The Bucks just aren't built to get into shootouts with teams and Atlanta comes in with a lot of bullets in the chamber and a scoring average of 104 points per game and 49.8 percent shooting.

After winning six straight to start the season, the Hawks have lost two in a row after losing in Orlando on Monday night, 93-89, but they cashed as nine-point pups.

Milwaukee is just 1-4 ATS in its last five games against teams with winning records while the Hawks have cashed in 19 of their last 27 Wednesday games. In this series, the Hawks have gone 7-3 ATS in the last 10 in Atlanta, plus the home team is on a 5-2 ATS surge and the chalk has cashed in six of the last eight.

The Bucks are on the second night of a back-to-back and they already struggle to score points. It just gets tougher tonight. Lay the points and play Atlanta.

GC NBA Play- Wednesday

On Wednesday the NBA Free play is on the Milwaukee Bucks. Game 703 at 7:05 eastern. The Hawks may be a little flat here as they have been brought back to earth losing their last 2 after a 6-0 start. Their last loss was very discouraging, from the stand point that despite their top effort they still fell short vs an Orlando Team that slaughtered them in the playoffs. Milwaukee is getting nearly 7 points here and comes in off a nice wire to wire win over the Knicks last night. The Bucks have cashed 5 straight on the road with no rest off a home game. For technical purposes we note the certain home favorites that scored 90 or less as a road dog of 5 or more points are losing propositions when taking on teams that scored 100 or more as a home favorite of 5 or more. Look for the Bucks, at the very least to stay within the Number. For the free play take the Milwaukee Bucks. GC

300-Unit NFL Midweek Must Play - BALTIMORE RAVENS

These two very good teams meet just four days after their last game and I've got to give the edge to the Ravens who had a pretty easy time with the Dolphins on Sunday as compared to the Falcons who needed a goal-line stand in the final minutes to hold off the Bucs in a hard fought divisional contest. Now they have to face the vaunted Baltimore defense and try to stop the balanced offensive attack of the Ravens.

Baltimore QB Joe Flacco looked very good against the Dolphins Sunday, completing 20-of-27 passes for 266 yards and two TDs. He's got some very nice weapons to go with him, including RB Ray Rice who had 97 yards receiving and 83 yards rushing Sunday to give him 538 total yards in his last four games. He is a great weapon out of the backfield when Flacco can't get the ball to WRs Anquan Boldin and Derrick Mason or TE Todd Heap. The Ravens offense is putting up 28.5 points and 390 yards over its last four games.

The Ravens defense picked off the Dolphins twice, including an interception from veteran safety Ed Reed who is healthy and back in the lineup. It's a defense that doesn't allow much of anything on the ground either, holding the opposition to less than 85 yards rushing for the third time in five games on Sunday, a five-game span where they haven't allowed a back to hit the 100-yard mark.

On the opposite side, Atlanta RB Michael Turner has topped 100 yards in two straight games and four of six. The offense for the Falcons puts up 30.8 points a game in its four home games this season but listed as questionable for tonight is WR Roddy White who twisted a knee in Sunday's win.

I always compare the Ravens' defense to the Steelers and we saw what Pittsburgh did to this Atlanta offense in the first week of the season, limiting the Falcons to nine points and just 58 yards rushing.

Baltimore is on ATS surges of 3-1-1 overall, 3-1-2 as road 'dogs and 18-6-2 as road 'dogs of up to three points. On the other side, Atlanta is just 8-19-1 ATS in its last 28 at home against teams with winning road records. These two last met in 2006 with the Ravens taking the 24-10 win as 3 ½-point favorites.

Baltimore is going to come into Atlanta tonight and take this one from the Falcons. Look for a key turnover or two in the second half to give this one to the Ravens. Play Baltimore.

100-Unit NBA Smart Play - MIAMI HEAT

Miami gets a rematch from that opening-season loss in Boston tonight when the Celtics visit South Beach to take on a Heat team that is still upset over the blown Tuesday game against the Jazz.

The Heat let Utah's Paul Millsap score 11 points in the final 30 seconds to force overtime and then fell in the extra session for a 116-114 loss after leading by 21 in the third quarter and eight with 29 seconds left. That loss, and the opening loss to the Celtics, is what leads me to believe we will see Miami at its collective best tonight.

The trio of stars for Miami – LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh – will come out completely focused for this one. They let Boston shoot 46 percent from the floor in the 88-80 win on opening night and they will bring the defense to the court tonight. The 116 points by the Jazz on Tuesday night was by far the most points the Heat had allowed all season, with the previous high being the 97 Minnesota scored in a 129-97 blowout loss on Nov. 2.

Miami comes in on ATS runs of 6-1 after getting a day off and 8-3-1 as a favorite of 5 to 10 ½ points.

The Celtics had won five straight before losing in Dallas on Monday, falling 89-87 as 3 ½-point underdogs. This is a tough request for Boston to play a third road game in five days, going from Oklahoma City to Dallas to Miami.

Look for the Heat to crank up the defensive intensity and deliver a big win tonight. Play Miami at home.

Posts: 113

These two very good teams meet just four days after their last game and I've got to give the edge to the Ravens who had a pretty easy time with the Dolphins on Sunday as compared to the Falcons who needed a goal-line stand in the final minutes to hold off the Bucs in a hard fought divisional contest. Now they have to face the vaunted Baltimore defense and try to stop the balanced offensive attack of the Ravens.

Baltimore QB Joe Flacco looked very good against the Dolphins Sunday, completing 20-of-27 passes for 266 yards and two TDs. He's got some very nice weapons to go with him, including RB Ray Rice who had 97 yards receiving and 83 yards rushing Sunday to give him 538 total yards in his last four games. He is a great weapon out of the backfield when Flacco can't get the ball to WRs Anquan Boldin and Derrick Mason or TE Todd Heap. The Ravens offense is putting up 28.5 points and 390 yards over its last four games.

The Ravens defense picked off the Dolphins twice, including an interception from veteran safety Ed Reed who is healthy and back in the lineup. It's a defense that doesn't allow much of anything on the ground either, holding the opposition to less than 85 yards rushing for the third time in five games on Sunday, a five-game span where they haven't allowed a back to hit the 100-yard mark.

On the opposite side, Atlanta RB Michael Turner has topped 100 yards in two straight games and four of six. The offense for the Falcons puts up 30.8 points a game in its four home games this season but listed as questionable for tonight is WR Roddy White who twisted a knee in Sunday's win.

I always compare the Ravens' defense to the Steelers and we saw what Pittsburgh did to this Atlanta offense in the first week of the season, limiting the Falcons to nine points and just 58 yards rushing.

Baltimore is on ATS surges of 3-1-1 overall, 3-1-2 as road 'dogs and 18-6-2 as road 'dogs of up to three points. On the other side, Atlanta is just 8-19-1 ATS in its last 28 at home against teams with winning road records. These two last met in 2006 with the Ravens taking the 24-10 win as 3 1/2-point favorites.

Baltimore is going to come into Atlanta tonight and take this one from the Falcons. Look for a key turnover or two in the second half to give this one to the Ravens. Play Baltimore.

100-Unit NBA Smart Play - MIAMI HEAT

Miami gets a rematch from that opening-season loss in Boston tonight when the Celtics visit South Beach to take on a Heat team that is still upset over the blown Tuesday game against the Jazz.

The Heat let Utah's Paul Millsap score 11 points in the final 30 seconds to force overtime and then fell in the extra session for a 116-114 loss after leading by 21 in the third quarter and eight with 29 seconds left. That loss, and the opening loss to the Celtics, is what leads me to believe we will see Miami at its collective best tonight.

The trio of stars for Miami - LeBron James, Dwyane Wade and Chris Bosh - will come out completely focused for this one. They let Boston shoot 46 percent from the floor in the 88-80 win on opening night and they will bring the defense to the court tonight. The 116 points by the Jazz on Tuesday night was by far the most points the Heat had allowed all season, with the previous high being the 97 Minnesota scored in a 129-97 blowout loss on Nov. 2.

Miami comes in on ATS runs of 6-1 after getting a day off and 8-3-1 as a favorite of 5 to 10 1/2 points.

The Celtics had won five straight before losing in Dallas on Monday, falling 89-87 as 3 1/2-point underdogs. This is a tough request for Boston to play a third road game in five days, going from Oklahoma City to Dallas to Miami.

Look for the Heat to crank up the defensive intensity and deliver a big win tonight. Play Miami at home.
